Maritime security is strongest when information flows freely and cooperation transcends borders

My time as a Senior Manager (Operations) at ReCAAP ISC has been both a rewarding and eye-opening experience. In this role, I oversee incident reporting and information sharing, ensuring that timely and accurate information reaches our member states to support swift responses at sea.

Conducting of IFN-TTX

What stood out to me most was the strong trust and cooperation among member states, despite their diverse systems and environments. It showed me how effective multilateral collaboration can directly enhance maritime security.

Some of the most meaningful moments have been seeing how timely information sharing leads to real operational impact, when authorities act quickly and prevent incidents from escalating. These experiences reinforced the importance of what we do.

This journey has broadened my perspective from a national to a regional level and strengthened my skills in coordination, communication, and strategic thinking. More importantly, it reminded me that maritime security is a shared responsibility, one that built on trust, cooperation, and timely information exchange.

Team ReCAAP ISC at the co-hosted Cluster Meeting in Hanoi, Vietnam

Commandant (JG) YR Murthy, Indian Coast Guard
Senior Manager (Operations)
Secondee from Republic of India